Answer

Does your university as an institution have a policy on ethical sourcing of food and supplies?

12-02-01

Yes: The university report indicated the existence of general "ethical and environmental policies," and that it provides "meal" services to students. The collective book proposal on "Environmental Governance" also reinforces this approach by focusing on "rationalizing the optimal exploitation of natural resources" and the economic principles of environmental governance (such as the polluter pays principle), indicating the existence of a theoretical and academic framework for rationalizing consumption and resources, which is supposed to extend to supplies (such as food), although an "ethical food sourcing" policy is not explicitly mentioned.
