Yes

The university strives to ensure genuine representation of university bodies through various actors, including professors, students and staff, in committees across different faculties and scientific councils. This is achieved through democratic elections, including student representatives, in a manner that ensures their concerns and opinions are conveyed to the administration. Accordingly, the university always strives to establish formal structures that allow members of the main stakeholders in the university, including students, faculty members, and staff, to participate in governance. The following are the steps taken to achieve this:

Yes, through:

By students or an electoral committee.

Student representation: Separate elections may be held for undergraduate students.

Faculty representation: Faculty members may vote for their representatives within their departments or faculties to ensure representation of all academic fields.

Staff representation: Non-faculty staff should have a clear path to representation through elections overseen by a designated committee.

Communication and accountability

Representatives should communicate regularly with their constituencies to gather opinions and inform them of decisions.

Establish accountability measures, such as periodic reviews or feedback mechanisms, to ensure that representatives fulfil their responsibilities.

Establishment and recognition of an independent student union at the University of Khenchela

Recognising an independent student union can strengthen student representation, foster a sense of belonging, and encourage advocacy, ultimately improving the student experience at the university.

This is achieved by:

- Defining the purpose and role of the student union
- Establishing a legal regulatory framework
- Establishing electoral procedures for the union's leadership

Ensuring accountability and transparency

The union contributes to university governance

Yes; to facilitate effective contributions to university governance by the student union, the following framework has been adopted:

- *Official representation in governance bodies
- *Defining the role of consultation and advice

Organised communication

Transparency and accountability

Supporting constructive cooperation.

The university works to enshrine the principle of collective participation in the management of university affairs in order to develop the higher education system. This is achieved through cooperation between various actors within and outside the university, including professors, students, administrators, and representatives of civil society. This includes involving local communities in supporting the university and keeping pace with its activities, given their pivotal role in linking the university to its economic and social environment in order to serve local development. This integration will achieve sustainable development and strengthen the university's position as a driver of progress and knowledge. This will be achieved through:

- Concluding partnership and cooperation agreements between the university and local communities in the fields of training, scientific research and local development
- Encouraging applied and field research in the fields of health, infrastructure, health and entrepreneurship.

The university pays great attention to promoting the principles of transparency, integrity and anti-corruption through regular and continuous awareness-raising about the dangers of these crimes, including:

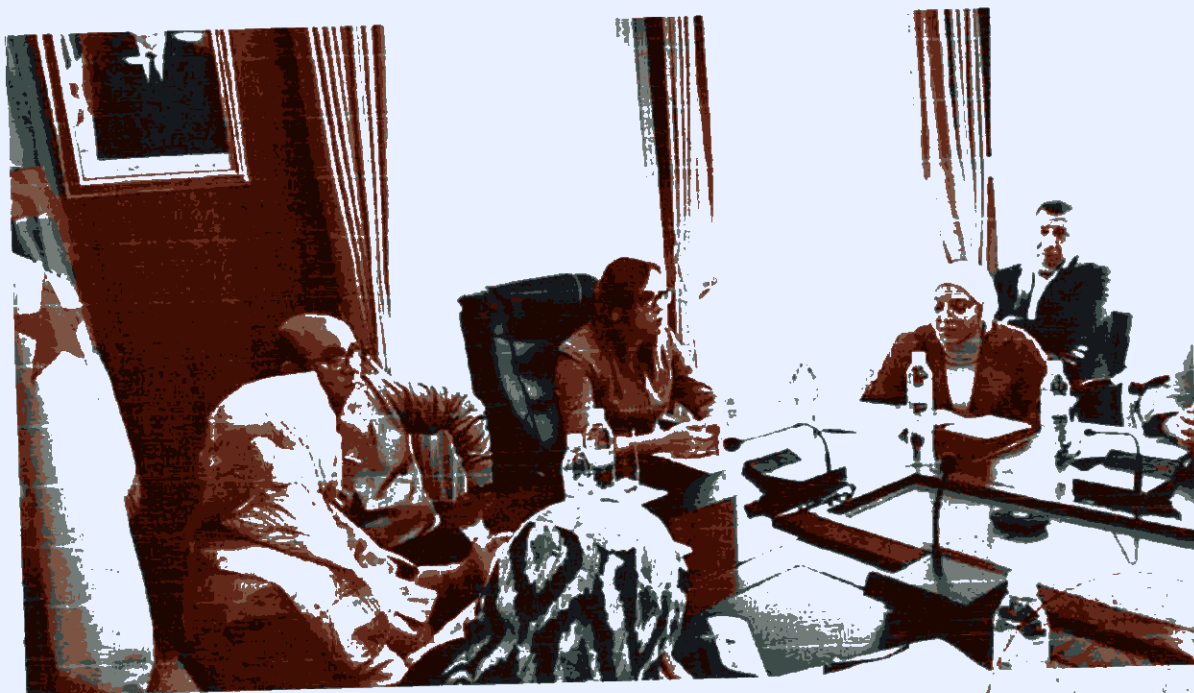

Disseminating the university's principles and commitments regarding organised crime, corruption, bribery, transparency and accountability.

The following is an overview of how these principles are presented:

Commitment to academic integrity.

Abbas Laghrur University, through its Faculty of Law and Political Science and under the supervision of the Dean of the Faculty and the guidance and accompaniment of a team of professors and staff, organised a #scientific_visit for outstanding students in the Law Department to the High Authority for Transparency, Prevention and Combating Corruption in Algiers. During the visit, the President of the Authority, Dr. Salima Mesrati, and other members provided students with detailed explanations about this important constitutional body and its active role in achieving transparency and preventing and combating corruption.
